On invitation of BICC/ Fatal Transactions Germany, Markus Wagner, Section Head of the German Federal Institute for Geosciences and Natural Resources presented the certification scheme that the institute is currently developing for mineral production in the Great Lakes Region. Certified trading chains in mineral production could represent an instrument to implement ethical standards and transparency in artisanal and small-scale mining, thus improving the quality of life for the communities in conflict-prone areas. Mr. Wagner presented the pilot study on Coltan and Casserite from Rwanda, followed by a discussion on how certifying minerals and new techniques of 'fingerprinting' can contribute to processes of peacebuilding and development in fragile regions.

Conference "Transparency in the Extractive Sector", Berlin (14 December 2007)/

Konferenz „Transparenz im Rohstoffsektor“, Berlin (14. Dezember 2007)

Jolien Schure attended the international conference 'Transparency in the Extractive Sector' of the Federal Ministry for Economic Co-operation and Development on 14 December 2007 in Berlin. The conference, hosted by the German government, followed the proposal at the 2007 G8 summit in Heiligendamm aimed at underlining the importance of transparency in the extractive sector.

Fatal Transactions' international coordinator, Anneke Galama, stressed in the panel debate focusing on multi stakeholder dialogues on certification, that the limits of the current mechanisms addressing the issue of 'financial transparency' should be acknowledged. Not only have certification schemes a limited conflict prevention potential but also is it simply too expensive to develop a Kimberley Process scheme for all mining assets in Africa.

Anneke Galama pointed out: "It is time to make a next step in which the daily realities of millions of artisanal miners—working under rough circumstances in the mining industry—are addressed by all stakeholders. It is time that these resources will contribute to sustainable development in the resource-rich countries that currently suffer from environmental degradation and severe human rights abuses caused by these same resources." Fatal Transactions therefore urges Germany and the next G8 presidency of Japan to continue addressing important topics and take their responsibilities as consumer countries seriously.
