Stabilization is currently regaining currency as a policy paradigm in international security, foreign and development policy. So-called stabilization efforts are directed particularly at regions that witness violent conflict or that are perceived to be at risk thereof. Under its umbrella, we find measures as diverse as direct military interventions, train and equip programmes for security forces, as well as development and humanitarian aid programmes.

The conference aims to bring together practitioners and academics working on issues related to stabilization in contexts of violent conflict to critically examine the concept(s) of stabilization and to reflect on risks and benefits of stabilization measures in practice. Throughout the day, we plan to discuss three bundles of questions:

- 1) What is our understanding of stabilization? Who or what is meant to be stabilized, and to what ends?
- 2) How does stabilization work in practice? What are the concrete means and practices of stabilization?
- 3) Does the growing significance of stabilization imply abandoning support for democracy and human rights, instead focusing on the establishment and maintenance of order?

BICC (BONN INTERNATIONAL CENTER FOR CONVERSION)

deals with global topics in the field of peace and conflict research.

Problems of organized violence lie at the heart of its research. BICC's themes range from the (de)mobilization of violent actors, arms exports and small arms control, to the meaning of organized violence for global migration and the use of natural resources.

BICC carries out transdisciplinary, applied research, which lays the foundation for its policy advice and contributions to public debates.
